ENCOLLECTIONS OF OLD NEWTOWN. Taunton Lake.

Fifty years ago or thereabouts, Taunson pond was the great fishing ground for the Newtown people, as well as for those living in the Taunton district. It was well stocked with pickerel and perch -black bass not having been placed in it at that period. At the lower end, a good sand beach (more easy of access then than now) afforded excellent facilities for bathing, and thither during the Summer months parties would resort for a cool swim in its clear waters. The writer well remembers when a lad being permitted to join one of these parties which was made up mainly in "the street" for a day's fishing, it consisted of Colonel Tim Shepard, Judge Chapman, Lawyer Shelton, John Johnson, Eli Hard, and others whose names I have forgotten. A couple of boats were procured and in the course of the forenoon a sufficient number of fish were caught to supply (with the addition of some pork and other articles that we brought with us) an excellent meal, which we cook and est, in a shady grove on the western shore of the lake

After the repast was over, some of the party felt an "exposition of sleep" for a number of days with two panelcome upon them and spread themselves on the grass for a quiet nap, but the Trowbridge. One represents a collec-Colonel (a perfect Falstaff in bulk) resolved upon taking a swim, and commenced to divest himself of his wearing apparel, preparatory to making a plunge This consisted of a cost of large dimensions, a waistcoat which would have autumn-leaves exhibits rare fidelity to spanned a flour-barrel, knec-breeches and mature, while the roses and rose-buds white cotton stockings, the latter cover are better than one usually sees even in ing a calf which it would have been su- the best paintings of this description. perfluous to pad, but which set off handsomely that style of dress; then making for the water's edge, he boldly plunged

He was fully six feet in height, but as gaunt as "Old Time in the primer," a dangerous companion in five fathoms of water; so the Colonel thought : for, the moment that he caught sight of him, his impulse was to gain the shore by the nearest route, but here he was foiled : for, " Crazy" would endeavor to intercept him (a task rendezed quite easy, through his superior length of limb); then the Colonel would haul off and make a stretch on another tack (as the sailors say), which manouvie, after repeated efforts, finally succeeded, when his roused companions. who were roaring with laughter, gave three cheers for his narrow but lucky by Wheeler, can be found at

He will be remembered as a lawyer of seme ability, but as too indolent to " labor in his vocation." He lived and died in the house now owned and occupied by Mr. Booth Terrill, who must remember him well. He was elected colonel, it is said, entirely for his fine personal opperrance, and not for his courage-a quality which he knew he did not pos eess: for he did not besitate, et all times, to acknowledge, if the British forces had actually commenced an attack upon Lounsbury's Fine Button Boots New London while he was there with his troops acting in its defence, that he would have fainted away on his horse from sheer fright, or that he would have spurred him away beyond the reach of

Happily for the Colonel, the British odore (Hardy) did not put his threats in execution, and he was enabled to return from his brief campaign to Newtown in safety, if not exactly wreathed with tourels, at least with no imputation of lack of courage, or even a acratch upon his portly and really handsome person. He was, upon the whole, a man of mark in his day and and generation; but, as I have endeav-ored to show, he did not intend to expose himself needlessly as a target for British bullets; for, as I remember him, he would have made a conspicuous one
